This presentation will focus on the models of co-teaching and how, as an instructional approach, it can help educators meet the diversity of learners in the classroom.

Topics covered will be models of co-teaching, how to prepare and plan to implement co-teaching, some of the obstacles to having successful co-teaching teams and strategies co-teaching teams can use to meet the diversity of learners in the classroom. Resources will be provided to help co-teaching teams plan to begin the 2015-16 school year as a well prepared co-teaching team.

Learner Outcomes:

- To learn the models of co-teaching and how they can be implemented
- To identify ways that co-teaching teams can meet the diversity of learners in their classroom
- To create a plan to implement co-teaching in the 2015-2016 school year

Presenter: Dr Jim Chapple

Dr. Jim Chapple currently serves as an Assistant Professor in the Department of Inclusive Services and Exceptional Learners at Ashland University. He has been a teacher, building principal, director of special education, an educational consultant and a professor. His areas of interest are in creating inclusive environments, co-teaching between general and special education teachers, as well as special education at an international level.
